When, on May 12, George Morris, also known as George Morris cabes and search for the money.

The prisoner, captured at Waverley Place and Tenth street, gave the name of Gunar Anderson, a machinist of 24 Charles street. Detectives went to Charles street in answer to an alarm that burglars were breaking into No. 14. They surrounded the block, and in the back yard of the place they saw a man, who shot at Policemen Ramirez and day morning that everybody had voted as made known many persons, who had street, pursued by the detectives. By comparing these with the forged check, he discovered only one in which there was such a space between the 'B' and the dot as in the forged name. This was made out to Marcus S. Gross, an insurance man of 350 Broadway, who was also one of the gang's victims. This slight clew led Mr. Foster to the office of Mr. Gross. He learned after much hard work that original checks for small amounts coming to the office in payment for premiums were taken by Isadore Gross premiums were taken by Isadore Gross and passed along a chain including Salo Gross, to Morris, who copied the signatures and instantly returned them. Thus the gang got names of banks as well as copies of signatures. The mispiaced dot halted their operations.

In some cases, it is stated, Morris would accompany the bearer of a check made payable to "cash" to the teller's window to identify him, and there dash off a forged guaranty of the "layer's" indorsement.
